Not illustrated. 1919 Excerpt: .approximate the shape of a funnel with the smallest diameter where the head is the highest. In other cases it is found economical to make the upper part--the part under the low head--consist of concrete or staves and the remainder of steel. The determination of the economical pipe now reduces to the determination of the diameters of the several sections and the problem may not be an easy one. The method of procedure suggested for the case of a pipe of constant diameter throughout, is no longer applicable. While considerable latitude is left to the designer it is nevertheless important to be able to determine what the theoretically economical diameters of the several sections are. In 1907, A. L. Adams proposed a principle for the design of a penstock that seemed to him self-evident. This principle may be stated as follows: That pipe is most economically designed for which the interest and depreciation on first cost of the pipe plus the annual value of the power lost due to friction in the pipe is a minimum. This principle of economy seems simple and logical and it is referred to in nearly every discussion on the economical size of penstock. Frequently, formulas for the economical diameter are derived from it. For the case of riveted steel, Professor D. W. Mead (Mead s Water Power Engineering, 2d edition, page 546) derives two formulas: (1) $d = 0.2153 V\sqrt{H}$ --for high head cih and 6!fta3 (2) $d = 0.2105 H\sqrt{L}$ --for...
